About the Authors

Fang Zhao (PhD) is senior lecturer and senior supervisor of PhD, Doctor of Business Administration (DBA) and Masters at the School of Management, Royal Melbourne Institute of Technology University (RMIT), Australia. She is the sole author of a recently released research book, Maximize Business Profits Through E-Partnerships (2005, IRM Press). She has published internationally approximately 40 refereed research works in the areas of innovation and knowledge management, entrepreneurship, e-business management, performance measurement, and TQM. She was a post-doctoral research fellow at the Centre for Management Quality Research, RMIT, before joining the School of Management.

* * *

Bill Anckar is the CEO of the hotel chain Omena Hotels Ltd. and an associate research fellow at the Institute for Advanced Management Systems Research (IAMSR) at Åbo Akademi University, Turku, Finland. His research focuses on consumer adoption of electronic and mobile commerce, in particular applications and services relating to travel and tourism. His work has appeared in several books and international journals, as well as in proceedings of numerous international conferences.
Gideon Azumah is a researcher at the University of Sheffield Management School, UK. He earned his first degree from the University of Ghana in psychology and his master’s degree in international business economics from Seoul National University, South Korea. He is currently working toward a doctorate (PhD) in e-organisations. Gideon’s research interests are: e-organisations, e-business, e-logistics, e-things, production planning and control, SMEs, competitive advantage, supply chain management, and knowledge management.

Clare Brindley was principal lecturer at Manchester Metropolitan University, UK. She has extensive publications in the fields of women entrepreneurship, risk management, and supply chain relationships. Dr. Brindley is a member of the Charted Institute of Marketing and the Institute of Small Business and Enterprise, as well as being an editorial board member of a number of leading international journals.

Mikael Collan works as a researcher and a teacher at the Institute for Advanced Management Systems Research at the Åbo Akademi University, Finland. His research interests include modeling and valuation of investments, with a focus on investments with a high degree of uncertainty (R&D, e- and m-commerce, and large industrial investments with long economic lives). His research interests further include application of intelligent and soft systems methodologies in business and in foresight (SOM, ANN, intelligent agents, and fuzzy logic).

Carmen Gould has worked as a research fellow for the Smart Internet Technology CRC Project at RMIT Research Development Unit. Ms. Gould recently completed her PhD within the School of Management at RMIT University, Melbourne, Australia. She also holds an Honours degree in quality management from Salford University, UK. Her research interests include information privacy and the Internet, societal impacts of the Internet, e-commerce, and Internet methodologies. She has had a number of publications in these areas.

Ville Harkke is a researcher at the Institute for Advanced Management Systems research and the Turku Centre for Computer Science at the Åbo Akademi University, Finland. His current research interests include mobile commerce business models, mobile systems impact on work processes, and knowledge mobilisation in healthcare environments.
Kim Hassall is associate professor and director of the Urban Logistics Studies Group, Melbourne University (Australia). Mr. Hassall began his career as an applied mathematician in a network optimisation role with the Defence Signals Directorate in 1977. In 1987, he became a principal transport economist in Canberra for the Bureau of Transport Economics working in both OR and econometric areas. In 1989, he was appointed national transport economist for the Australian Postal Authority in Melbourne. While there, he also held positions as manager of transport operations and manager of transport strategy. He has represented Australia as a national expert in e-commerce logistics. He has published widely in areas of transport costing, urban logistics, and strategic e-commerce, both nationally and internationally. Mr. Kim was also a board member of the Australian Trucking Association as director of Urban Strategy.

Mauri Kantola is quality manager and senior lecturer of telecommunication and e-business of Turku Polytechnic, Finland. He was previously the quality manager of the Polytechnic of Southwest Finland and the researcher at the Turku School of Economics and Business Administration. Mr. Kantola holds the master of social sciences (economics) degree from the University of Turku and is finishing his doctoral dissertation on network analysis in the Department of Sociology of the University of Turku. He is interested in the quality assurance and the structural issues of the telecommunication sector and the field of higher education.

Juha Kettunen is the rector of Turku Polytechnic, Finland. He was previously director of the Vantaa Institute for Continuing Education, University of Helsinki, and director of the Advanced Management Education Centre, University of Jyväskylä. He holds a PhD from the University of Bristol, UK, and a DSc from the University of Jyväskylä, Finland. His main fields of research include educational policy, strategic planning, educational administration, quality management, and management education. Before his career in higher education, he was working as an economist at The Research Institute of the Finnish Economy. At that time, the research interests included public finance and labour market policy.

S.C. Lenny Koh (BEng - Hons, PhD, MIEE, MCMII, MIOM) is a deputy director of MBA in eco-business and a lecturer in quantitative methods and management at the University of Sheffield, Management School, UK. Her research interests are in the areas of production planning and control (particularly in MRP, MRPII and ERP), uncertainty management, modern operations management, logistics and supply chain management, e-business, e-organisations.
and sustainable manufacturing. She has published widely in various international and national academic journals and conferences. She is associate editor of the International Journal of Operational Research, an editorial board member of the International Journal of Logistics Systems and Management and Benchmarking: An International Journal, serves as a chair and on the board of committee of various international conferences, and a referee for several international journals in these disciplines.

Stuart Maguire (PhD) is a lecturer in the Management School at Sheffield University, UK. He has worked in the area of information systems (IS) for several firms in both the private and public sectors. He has also completed over 20 years working within business and management schools in the United Kingdom. During this time he has been able to undertake research in over 150 organisations. Stuart’s current research interests are information strategy, customer listening tools, the intelligent organisation, supply chain management, and the role of the internet within SMEs.

Ambareen Musa is e-commerce manager for GE Consumer Finance, UK. She earned a Bachelor of Business Information Systems at RMIT University in Australia. Ms. Musa has had quite a variety of experience starting from setting up RentFAST, an online accommodation service for international students in Australia. She then moved on to set up a cross sell program among the 26 different businesses at General Electric in Australia promoting sharing of knowledge and information. In 2004, she decided to move to the UK to take up the e-commerce manager role for GE Consumer Finance to set up their business to consumer Internet distribution channel.

S. Pavic is a doctoral student at the University of Sheffield, Management School, UK. Her particular research interest is in the new ways of creating competitive advantage through the use of e-business in small and medium-sized enterprises.

M. Simpson (PhD) is a lecturer in business studies at Sheffield University Management School (UK) and teaches operations management and marketing. His research interest is in the area of performance measurement, organizational improvement and competitive advantage and concentrates on small and medium-sized enterprises.

Steve New is a lecturer at the Saïd Business School and fellow of Hertford College at the University of Oxford (UK). Originally a physicist, his background includes work in the aerospace, automotive, and consulting sectors, and his research work has focused on operations and supply chain management. He was formerly a lecturer at the Manchester School of Management, UMIST. Dr. New works as a consultant for a range of organisations and is a regular speaker at industry and academic conferences.

Anna Sell is a PhD candidate at Turku School of Computer Science and a researcher at the Institute for Advanced Management Systems Research (IAMSR) at the Åbo Akademi University, Turku, Finland. She has worked as a teacher in the field of electronic commerce and is currently working on her dissertation, focusing her research on mobile personal calendar systems usage and user needs. Her main interests include electronic and mobile commerce, mobile HCI, and mobile time management applications.

Mohini Singh is associate professor in information technology and e-business at RMIT University, Australia. Her research interests are in the areas of e-administration, e-business management strategies, B2B e-business issues, virtual communities, and IT value. She has published widely in the areas of e-business and new technology and innovation management. Her publications include books, book chapters, journal articles, and conference papers. She is the principal editor of E-Commerce Diffusion: Strategies and Challenges (Heidelberg Press) and E-Business: Innovation and Change Management (Idea Group Publishing). Singh is currently working on a collaborative project on e-administration with INT-Evry in France. She recently completed a large research project on e-business evaluation in Australia. More information is available at www.rmit.edu.au/bus/bit/mohini_singh.

Amrik Sohal is a professor in the Department of Management at Monash University (Australia) and associate dean (research degrees) for the Faculty of Business and Economics. His research and teaching is in areas of operations/ manufacturing management, quality management, supply chain management, and technology management. He has published more than 100 journal articles and co-authored three books. He has received research grants from the state and federal governments, the Australian Research Council, and Monash University. In 2001, Professor Sohal received the Vice-Chancellor’s Award for Postgraduate Supervision. In 2004, he received an award for research excellence from the International Association for Management of Technology.

Alexandra Steinberg is a teacher and doctoral researcher in organisational psychology at The London School of Economics and Political Science. Her current research scrutinises the interface of organisational change, knowledge management, and social psychology, and advocates a different view to the much-studied subjects of knowledge dynamics. Ms. Steinberg holds a Bachelor of Science (Honours) in business studies from Mannheim Study Academy, Germany, and a MSc in organisational and social psychology from the London School of Economics and Political Science, UK. Ms. Steinberg is an experienced organisational change consultant and coach, having worked in this role for five years in both Europe and overseas.

J. D. Thomson has managed $2,000 M of national projects; developed international innovative defence and industry capability policy papers for defence and government including defence industry policy; developed high-tech project delivery benchmarking and best practices; established an electronic procurement statistics database for $4b pa of purchases; researched transaction costs of tendering; studied defence/industry interface best practices; and was awarded a fellowship to study interfaces in Singapore, Israel, Sweden, Holland, Germany, UK, and later in the United States and Japan. Mr. Thomson was a visiting research fellow at ADFA/UNSW for five years, and vice president of the Systems Engineering Association Australia in 1999. Recently, he has worked for a global corporation in strategic electronic business, has developed a road map for electronic business global roll out, and has researched electronic supply chain logistics models.

Di Waddell is an associate professor in management programs at Deakin University, Burwood campus, Australia. She is responsible for the development, implementation, and evaluation of postgraduate and undergraduate courses and teaches in the areas of quality management, change management, and strategic management. These subjects are offered both on-campus and off-campus. She holds a PhD (Monash), Master of Education Administration (Melbourne), Bachelor of Education (Melbourne), and Bachelor of Arts (LaTrobe). She has published and presented many papers on resistance to change, leadership, e-business, quality management, and forecasting for managers. Her publications include three books: Organisation Development and Change (Nelson-Thomson Learning), E-Business in Australia: Concepts and Cases (Pearson Publishing) and E-Business Innovation and Change Management (Idea Group Publishing). She has taught in both public and private education systems for many years, as well as presenting specifically designed industry-based courses.

Karyn Welsh is an account executive with expertise in business development, account management, and communications within dynamic and competitive industries. She has a track record in business analysis and business planning in relation to strategic account development and considerable experience in developing comprehensive management proposals for winning and adding value to existing businesses. She has been responsible for business development planning, profitability, revenue growth, and quality customer service in respect of a portfolio of strategic accounts.

Diane Wright is principal lecturer at Manchester Metropolitan University (UK), where she has a significant role in academic enterprise. Prior to working at the University, Wright spent a number of years as a marketing director and consultant. Her research interests focus on the area of relationship marketing and small business, and she is a member of the Institute of Small Business and Enterprise.

Ambika Zutshi is a lecturer in the Bowater School of Management & Marketing, Deakin University, Australia. Her qualifications include a bachelor’s degree in environmental sciences, a master’s degree in environmental management, and a PhD. Her current research is focused in the area of triple bottom line reporting, the role of various stakeholders in the planning and implementation of environmental management systems, business ethics, and supply chain management. She has articles published in journals such as Business Process Management Journal, Managerial Auditing Journal, Management of Environmental Quality: An International Journal, and The International Journal of Environmental and Sustainable Development.

Samar Zutshi holds a bachelor’s degree in computer science from Madurai University in India and a master’s degree in information technology from Monash University. He is currently completing a PhD at the Faculty of Information Technology, Monash University. His research focus is on content-based multimedia retrieval. He has been using OSS for several years and plans to release the software developed for his PhD as OSS. He is interested in doing further inter-disciplinary research at the management-IT interface.