About the Contributors

D. Ndirangu Wachanga, PhD (University of North Texas, 2007) is assistant professor of Journalism and Information Science at the University of Wisconsin-Whitewater. He is currently directing and producing two major documentaries on Prof. Ali Mazrui and Prof. Ngugi Wa Thiong’o. These pioneering projects seek to preserve African memories through conversations with African sages and elders. They are being filmed in three continents: Africa, North America and Europe. Wachanga has taught at The Mayborn Graduate Institute of Journalism, and Department of Radio, TV, and Film at the University of North Texas. He has taught courses on media and society; media ethics; new communication technologies; culture, community and documentary film, and new Diasporas. Wachanga has published several essays in prestigious peer reviewed journals, has an essay in press at the Yale University Press as well as a chapter in Global Media Convergence and Cultural Transformation: Emerging Social Patterns and Characteristics. Wachanga has made several presentations at national and international conferences. He has written passionate journalistic pieces for various newspapers in Kenya and United States. He has been featured both by the BBC and VOA. Wachanga is writing a book on New African Diaspora as well as editing a monograph on media ethics in the Global South.

* * *

Adedayo “Dayo” Abah, PhD - Associate Professor in the Dept. of Journalism and Mass Communications at Washington and Lee University, Lexington, VA. She has a master’s degree in Theological Studies from Southern Methodist University, Dallas, TX (1993), and another master’s degree in Media Studies from Texas Christian University, Ft. Worth, TX (1996). She has a Ph.D. from University of South Carolina, Columbia, SC (2004). Her research interests include First Amendment and online speech issues as well as Nollywood and African pop culture. She is grateful to the Lenfest Fund at Washington and Lee University for making the research for this work possible.

Nwachukwu A. Egbunike - Graduate student in Communication and Language Arts, University of Ibadan, Ibadan. He was Commissioning Editor in Spectrum Books Ltd, until 2007. Egbunike has been the Managing Editor of Feathers and Ink, Ibadan since 2007. Egbunike is the Director of Irawo University Centre, Ibadan.

Amie Breeze Harper - PhD candidate at University of California-Davis. She researches critical food geographies with an emphasis on critical race and black feminist theory. She is the editor of Sistah Vegan: Black Female Vegans Speak on Food, Identity, Health and Society
About the Contributors

Peter Githinji, PhD - Assistant professor of linguistics at Ohio University, Athens. Githinji has published on language attitudes, and on negotiation and construction of layered identities. He is a Swahili expert and has conducted research on sheng.

Frederick Kang’ethe Iraki, PhD - Associate Professor of French at the United States International University, Kenya. He holds a PhD in linguistics from the University of Geneva. He is the founder editor of the Journal of Language, Technology and Entrepreneurship in Africa. His areas of research and publication include language and culture, language & Technology, language & politics, and higher education issues of quality assurance.

Yusuf Kalyango Jr., PhD - Assistant professor of journalism in the E. W. Scripps School of Journalism at Ohio University, where he also serves as Director of the Institute for International Journalism. Dr. Kalyango published nine peer-reviewed journal articles and two scholarly book chapters between 2007 and 2010. His research focuses on comparative political communication, media and democratization, and international crises, which has won two AEJMC and two ICA awards.

Bernard J. Kikech - Graduate student in English and Linguistics, Kenyatta University, Kenya. His main area of interest in research is corpus linguistics and language proficiency.

Purity Kimani - Graduate student of Applied Linguistics, Kenyatta University, Kenya. She has taught English and Literature in Kenya for twelve years. Her main areas of interest in research are sociolinguistics and discourse analysis.

Rick Malleus, PhD - Assistant professor Seattle University. Malleus has developed and taught a special topics course in “Africa and Communication”, teaches foundation courses in communication theory and media, and offers several social interaction classes. His current research interests include intercultural re-entry and cross-cultural comparison in technology/media use. Malleus has written several publications for the Zimbabwe Open University.

Hayes Mawindi Mabweazara, PhD - Edinburgh Napier University, Scotland, UK. He has written book chapters and journal articles on the theoretical and methodological aspects of the new media and journalism practice in Africa and the consumption of the tabloid press in Zimbabwe. His research interests also centre around the sociology of journalism, audiences and reception studies in Africa and the wider global South. Address: Edinburgh Napier University, Craighouse Campus, Edinburgh, EH10 5lG, UK. Email: h.mabweazara@napier.ac.uk

Sangai Mohochi, PhD - Senior Lecturer in the Department of Linguistics, Languages and Literature at Maseno University, Kenya. He came to Maseno from Stanford University, where he taught Swahili Language, Literature and Culture for three years (September 2006-September, 2009). He joined Stanford from St. Lawrence University in Canton, New York where he taught Swahili for 2 years (June 2004-June 2006). Sangai taught Swahili Language and Literature at his alma mater for 9 years before moving to the United States of America. He has been actively involved in the development of Swahili language as a teacher, researcher, and theatre practitioner. His areas of research interest include: language attitudes; motivation and language learning; Language and the media; language choice for identity and development; Swahili literature. He has published and made several conference presentations in those areas.

George W. Musambira. PhD - Assistant professor in Nicholson School of Communication, University of Central Florida, Orlando, Florida. He taught in the communication department at Western Kentucky University. His research interests include bereavement communication, international and intercultural communication, and communication research productivity. He has presented over 30 refereed papers at national and international conferences and published in refereed. Musambira previously served on the editorial board of the journal World Communication and currently serves on the editorial board of the Journal of Intercultural Communication Research.

Samuel Muwanguzi - Doctoral candidate in the College of Information, University of North Texas, Denton, Texas. He was chief news editor for the government-owned Radio Uganda and Uganda Television until 2001. Before, he worked as a journalist for various newspapers and as a news editor for Radio Uganda. His research interests include social construction of New Communication and Information Technologies and health communication concerning HIV/AIDS. He has presented over ten refereed national and international conference papers and published in the refereed journal International Journal of Distance Education Technology.

Mahiri Mwita, PhD - Lecturer of Kiswahili and Comparative Literature at Princeton University. He is a theatre scholar and a long-time practitioner in community theatre, Theatre for Development and the Kenya National Drama Festival movement. His current research focuses on the use of theatre-based outreaches to mobilize people in low-income communities to confront and discourse on sensitive issues facing them such as HIV/AIDS, tribalism, civic education and bad governance. He teaches and writes on Kiswahili literature and theatre, poetry and critical theories that have impacted the development of creative writing and criticism of African literature and theatre.

Siho Nam, PhD - Assistant Professor of Communication at the University of North Florida. His main research program delves into the relationship between the media and social change/democracy, informed by critical and cultural studies perspectives. Within that context, his research has dealt with such issues as media diversity, international communication, media globalization, and critical media literacy.

Martin C. Njoroge, PhD- Senior Lecturer in the Department of English & Linguistics, Kenyatta University, Kenya. His main areas of interest include research on literacy of children in extremely difficult circumstances, communication, sociolinguistics, general linguistics and language-in-education issues and have published on the same.

Emily Bosire-Ogechi, PhD - Lecturer, School of Information Sciences, Moi University, Kenya. She has research interests and publications in ICTs for development, publishing and language education, indigenous knowledge, and information and communication.

Nathan Oyori Ogechi, PhD - Associate Professor and chair of the Department of Kiswahili and Other African Languages, Moi University, Kenya. His research interests are in contact linguistics, linguistic human rights, language and politics, and language in education with a focus on Kenya. He recently co-authored a Linguistic Human Rights and the Language Policy in the Kenyan Educational System (OS-SREA: Addis Ababa). He has also edited the Harmonization and Standardization of the orthographies of Kenya Languages (CASAS: Cape Town).
About the Contributors

Uche Onyebadi, PhD - Assistant professor of journalism at the School of Journalism, Southern Illinois University Carbondale, U.S.A. He holds a Ph.D. in Journalism (Political Communication) from the School of Journalism, University of Missouri.

Jim Schnell, PhD - Professor in the Division of Social & Behavioral Sciences at Ohio Dominican University. He has 11 books in print, over 60 book chapters and journal articles and over 140 conference presentations. Schnell was a Fulbright Scholar to Cambodia in 2005-2006 and currently serves as an assessor for the Fulbright Program. He retired from the U.S. Air Force (Reserve), at the rank of Colonel, in 2007 after serving 30 years in the intelligence community. His final assignment was as Assistant Air Attache to the U.S. Embassy in Beijing, China.

Jiafei Yin, PhD - Assistant Professor of journalism, Central Michigan University, received her doctorate and master’s degree in journalism from the University of Missouri. Her bachelor’s degree was in English and American literature from Nanjing University in China. She worked for the China Daily, the country’s leading national English-language daily newspaper, from 1982-93 as a wire editor, reporter, copy-editor and chief copy-editor. Yin has published in the Journal of Advertising Research and the Asian Journal of Communication, and contributed book chapters in the Issues and Challenges in Asian Journalism, Emerging Issues in Contemporary Journalism, Terrorism, Globalization & Mass Communication, Handbook on Global Communications Ethics (to be published by Blackwell), and Global Journalism.

Saman Talib, PhD - Assistant professor at the School of Media and Communication, Beaconhouse National University, Pakistan. She has worked at publishing houses, broadcast networks, radio stations, and digital news organizations. Her scholarship considers the conjunctions of organizations, media and politics. She is particularly interested in researching the effective use of new media to foster knowledge, literacy and participation in civil society.

Saadia Gardezi - Writer for The Friday Times in Lahore on issues relating to humanitarian aid, political economy and the media in politics. She teaches political theory and is involved in research in economics and industrial policy at the Lahore University of Management Sciences. Her research interests also include critical Marxist theory in international political economy and international security studies. She also writes fiction and has been published by the Oxford University press and various journals.