About the Contributors

Miltiadis D. Lytras is an assistant professor in the Computer Engineering and Informatics Department-CEID (University of Patras). His research focuses on semantic Web, knowledge management and e-learning, with more than 100 publications in these areas. He has coedited/coedits, 25 special issues in international journals (e.g., IEEE Transaction on Knowledge and Data Engineering, IEEE Internet Computing, IEEE Transactions on Education, Computers in Human Behaviour, etc.) and has authored/[co]edited 12 books (e.g., Open Source for Knowledge and Learning management, Ubiquitous and Pervasive Knowledge Management, Intelligent Learning Infrastructures for Knowledge Intensive Organizations, Semantic Based Information systems]. He is the founder and officer of the Semantic Web and Information Systems Special Interest Group in the Association for Information Systems (http://www.sigsemis.org). He serves as the (co) editor in chief of 12 international journals (e.g., International Journal of Knowledge and Learning, International Journal of Technology Enhanced Learning, International Journal on Social and Humanistic Computing, International Journal on Semantic Web and Information Systems, International Journal on Digital Culture and Electronic Tourism, International Journal of Electronic Democracy, International Journal of Electronic Banking, International Journal of Electronic Trade] while he is associate editor or editorial board member in 7 more.

Patricia Ordóñez de Pablos is professor in the Department of Business Administration and Accountability, at the Faculty of Economics of The University of Oviedo (Spain). Her teaching and research interests focus on the areas of strategic management, knowledge management, intellectual capital measuring and reporting, organizational learning, and human resources management. She is executive editor of the International Journal of Learning and Intellectual, the International Journal of Strategic Change Management and coexecutive editor of International Journal of Chinese Culture and Management.

* * *

Ruth Alas is the vice-rector for Scientific Affairs and head of Management Department in Estonian Business School. She has written 21 management textbooks and more than 100 articles. She is teaching change management. Ruth Alas has given lectures about change management in China and South Africa Republic. Her research is focusing on employee attitudes, learning abilities, organisational culture, leadership, crises management, business ethics, and corporate social responsibility. She
About the Contributors

Poul Houman Andersen is the ASB professor in international business with a particular emphasis on strategic organization and management of global market activities. He is heading the Centre for Global Business Designs at the Aarhus School of Business, University of Aarhus. Recently his research has focused on management and organization of global sourcing processes and globalization of industrial clusters. His has more than 100 scholarly publications. His work is published in California Management Review, Journal of World Business, Research Policy, Strategic Organization and Industrial Marketing Management among several other journal and book outlets.

Dimitris Bibikas is a research associate and PhD candidate at SEERC (South East European Research Centre), a Research Centre of The University of Sheffield and CITY College. He holds a BSc in mathematics of Aristotle University of Thessaloniki, a Masters in Information Systems and a Masters in Business Administration, both from the University of Macedonia, Greece. His research interests include the impact of information and communication technologies on knowledge and innovation management, social networks and organisational adaptive strategies. He has extensive experience in coordinating R&D projects awarded by the European Commission, the Greek General Secretariat for Research and Technology, and the Greek Information Society Programme.

Toke Bjerregaard conducts research within areas such as entrepreneurship and innovation, and has investigated knowledge exchange mechanisms between universities and industry. Per Nikolaj Bukh is professor at the Department of Business Studies at Aalborg University, Denmark (http://www.pnbukh.com/). He has published about 200 articles, book chapters, reports, and books on a number of subjects including knowledge management, intellectual capital reporting, benchmarking, and management accounting. In addition to his research activities, Per Nikolaj Bukh often contributes to postgraduate programs and conferences.

Huei-Chen Hsu is an associate professor in the Department of Management Information System, Transworld Institute of Technology, Taiwan. She received her PhD from the National Yunlin University of Science and Technology, Taiwan. Her research focuses on managerial and global information systems topics, including the exercise of influence by information technology professionals and the diffusion of IT innovations in developing countries. She has published in the Journal of Strategic Information Systems and Journal of Advertising Research as well as presented papers at conferences like the International Conference on Information Systems, the Academy of Management, and the Americas Conferences on Information Systems.

Tongo Constantine Imafidon is a lecturer at the Department of Business Studies at Covenant University in Nigeria. His teaching and research interests include management, industrial relations, and behavioural science. He has published and presented papers on organizational commitment, industrial relations, management, and human resource issues. His work has appeared in many international and local journals. He has a strong flair for tools in operations research.

Luiz Antonio Joia is an associate professor and MBA head at the Brazilian School of Public and Business Administration of Getulio Vargas Foundation, and an adjunct professor at Rio de Janeiro State University, Brazil. He has published three books, several chapters, and more than 50 scientific papers in international journals and conferences. He holds a BSc in civil engineering from the Militar Institute of Engineering, Brazil, and an MSc in civil engineering and a DSc in production engineering from the Federal University of Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. He also holds an MSc in management studies from the Oxford University, UK.

Arla Juntunen is a PhD from the Marketing and Management Department of the Helsinki School of Economics (HSE) in Finland, and a Master’s degree in Social Sciences/Administrative Information Systems at the University of Helsinki, is a post-doc researcher and senior advisor in Finland’s Ministry of the Interior. Her research interests focus on strategic management, business networks, knowledge management, and managerial capabilities.

Jakob Lauring has generally conducted research in the area of cross-cultural interaction, especially with regard to the management of knowledge sharing and communication. Departing from this theoretical field, he has investigated the behaviour of international managers, expatriates, tourists, immigrants, and refugees. These studies of human interaction in cross-cultural settings are mainly based on anthropological approaches combined with organization and management theory. Special areas of interest are organisational ethnography, diversity management, innovation and social responsibility, knowledge management and organisation learning, expatriation, and cross-cultural interaction.

Corrado lo Storto received a Laurea in Aeronautical Engineering cum laude, an MBA and a PhD in Science of Industrial Innovation. Currently, he is an associate professor in Economic and Management Engineering at the Universita’ di Napoli Federico II (Italy) where he teaches economics and business organisation. His research and professional interests include technology transfer, innovation management, knowledge management, project risk management, and program and project evaluation. He has published several papers in International Journal of Technology Management, Technovation, International Journal of Knowledge Management Studies, Enterprise and Innovation Management Studies and International Journal of Information Systems and Change Management. He is the chair of the Italian Technology Management-IEEE chapter and editor in chief of the International Journal of Engineering Management and Economics.

Christian Nielsen works as equity strategist at Danske Andelskassers Bank (http://www.dabank.dk/uk/) and is furthermore employed as associate professor at Department of Business Studies at Aalborg University, Denmark. His research interests focus on the interaction between companies and the capital market, and he has published several articles concerning companies reporting and communication related to business models, intellectual capital, and strategy.

Iraklis Paraskakis is a senior research officer, academic director of the Doctoral Programme at SEERC and senior lecturer at Computer Science Department of CITY College. His research interests are in the area of education and information technology, information systems, knowledge management, and semantic Web services. He is interested in exploring the impact and overlap of these areas into learning and organisations. He has published in various journals and conferences (ITS, CAL, PEG, EARLI, ESWC, BIS) and is a member of the Artificial Intelligence and Education Society (AIED), European Association for Research on Learning and Instruction (EARLI) and IEEE. He has been the principal investigator in a number, of successfully completed, EU projects, as well as current ones in the areas of e-learning, knowledge management, and semantic Web services.

Alexandros G. Psychogios is a lecturer and academic research coordinator of the Business Administration and Economics Department of CITY College, Affiliated Institution of The University of Sheffield. His research interests include knowledge management, organisational learning, organisational change and its impact on human resources, and total quality management. He has published in a variety of journals, such as the International Journal of Human Resource Management, The TQM Magazine, The Qualitative Report, and so forth.

Robin Roslender is a professor in accountancy and director of research in the School of Management and Languages at Heriot-Watt University. A trained sociologist and accountant, he divides his research effort between managerial accounting and critical accounting topics. Currently, Dr. Roslender is looking at the relationship between workforce health and well-being and intellectual capital. In early 2008, he was appointed editor of the Journal of Human Resource Costing and Accounting.

Paulo Sanz is a researcher and an adjunct professor at the Brazilian School of Public and Business Administration of Getulio Vargas Foundation, Brazil. He has published several scientific papers in international journals and conferences. He holds a BSc in systems analysis and an MBA from the Brazilian School of Public and Business Administration of Getulio Vargas Foundation.

Giovanni Schiuma is scientific director of the Centre for Value Management at the Università della Basilicata in Italy, and visiting research fellow at the Cranfield School of Management. He is also research director of the Institute of Knowledge Asset Management (IKAM) in Italy. Giovanni’s research, teaching, and consulting focus on linking knowledge assets and organization behavior to performance management and organization value creation. Giovanni is also strongly involved in executive education, running seminars for public and private organisations, and regularly offers seminars in Europe and Middle East. He has authored or coauthored more than 100 publications, including books, articles, research reports, and white papers on a range of research topics particularly embracing knowledge asset and intellectual capital management, performance measurement and management, Italian industrial districts, and energetic organisation. He is recognized as a passionate and influential thinker on knowledge assets and intellectual capital management, and he is committed to developing theoretical and practical frameworks, approaches, and tools to drive both public and private organizations towards the improvement of their value creation dynamics by understanding, exploiting, measuring, and managing knowledge and intangible assets. Among others, his current research interest is focused on organisational behaviour, and particularly on how complex organisations can be transformed into intelligent organisations by leading and managing energy and emotions. He is a regular speaker at conferences, and has teaching and consultancy experience across Europe on knowledge and innovation management as well as on performance measurement and management. He is specialized particularly in the design, implementation, and review of knowledge asset management initiatives and performance measurement systems designed to drive innovative change and learning dynamics in organizations and to support company’s performance improvement and value creation.

Ana C. Vasconcelos is a lecturer at the Information Studies Department of the University of Sheffield. Her research interests include the interface between information systems development and the management of knowledge and information, with a focus on discourse and identity, the role of discursive practices in IS adaptation, organisational and political arenas, communities of practice and virtual communities, professional discourses, and identity in information work.

Ernesto Villalba graduated in psychology at the Autonomous University of Madrid. He obtained his PhD in international and comparative education at the Institute of International Education at Stockholm University with a thesis on the relationship of knowledge management and training in Swedish companies. He is currently working at the Centre for Research on Lifelong Learning at the Joint Research Centre of the European Commission. His major areas of interest are knowledge management, lifelong learning, and education for innovation.