About the Contributors

Todd Loendorf is a PhD student in the School of Public and International Affairs at North Carolina State University. He holds an MBA (information security) from James Madison University, and a BA in political science from the University of North Carolina at Greensboro. His primary research interests are at the intersection of technology, security, and democracy and in the development and use of spatial techniques in social science research.

G. David Garson is a full professor of public administration at North Carolina State University, where he teaches courses on American government, research methodology, computer applications, and geographic information systems. In 1995, he was recipient of the Donald Campbell Award from the Policy Studies Organization, American Political Science Association, for outstanding contributions to policy research methodology, and in 1997 of the Aaron Wildavsky Book Award from the same organization. He is author of Guide to Writing Quantitative Papers, Theses, and Dissertations (Dekker, 2001), editor of Social Dimensions of Information Technology (2000), Information Technology and Computer Applications in Public Administration: Issues and Trends (1999), and Handbook of Public Information Systems (1999), and is author of Neural Network Analysis for Social Scientists (1998) and Computer Technology and Social Issues (1995), and is author, co-author, editor, or co-editor of 17 other books, and author or co-author of more than 50 articles. For the last 20 years, he has also served as editor of the Social Science Computer Review and is on the editorial board of four additional journals.

Copyright © 2008, IGI Global. Copying or distributing in print or electronic forms without written permission of IGI Global is prohibited.
Charles N. Davis worked for nearly 10 years as a journalist after his graduation from North Georgia College in 1986, working for newspapers, magazines, and a news service in Georgia, Florida, and Ireland. As a national correspondent for Lafferty Publications, a Dublin-based news wire service for financial publications, Davis reported on banking, e-commerce, and regulatory issues for 7 years before leaving full-time journalism in 1993 to complete a master’s degree from the University of Georgia’s Henry W. Grady School of Journalism and Mass Communication, and to earn a doctorate in mass communication from the University of Florida in 1995. As a member of the Missouri School of Journalism faculty since 1999, he has continued to write for business and legal publications while conducting scholarly research on access to governmental information and new media law, including jurisdictional issues, intellectual property, and online libel. His first edited book, Access Denied: Freedom of Information in the Information Age, was published in 2001 by Iowa State University Press. Davis has earned a Sunshine Award from the Society of Professional Journalists for his work in furthering freedom of information, and the University of Missouri Provost’s Award for Outstanding Junior Faculty Teaching. In March 2003, he was inducted into the University of Missouri – Columbia chapter of the Golden Key International Honor Society.

Leigh Estabrook directs the Library Research Center at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. Her primary teaching is the core course, Libraries, Information and Society. Among her recent research projects are a series of studies of the impact of the USA Patriot Act on libraries, and a study of the book as a gold standard for promotion and tenure in the humanistic disciplines. She is the recipient of the 2003 Association for Library and Information Science Award for professional contributions to library and information science education, and the 2002 Beta Phi Mu Award from the American Library Association and Beta Phi Mu for distinguished service to education for librarianship. Her full vita may be found at https://netfiles.uiuc.edu/leighe/www/vita.html.

Abby A. Goodrum is the Velma Rogers Graham research chair in news media and technology and has a full-time faculty position in the School of Journalism in association with the Edward S. Rogers Sr. Graduate School for Advanced Communications. The Velma Rogers Graham Chair is funded by a $2,000,000 endowment established by Ted and Loretta Rogers for the purpose of conducting research that addresses the relationship of various aspects of emerging communications and information technology to news gathering and the practice of journalism. Dr. Goodrum went to Ryerson from Syracuse University, where she has been a professor in the School of Information Studies, as well as a research scientist at the Information Institute of Syracuse and research associate for the Convergence Center for Communication and Media Studies. While on leave in 2004/05, she was a visiting research professor at the Canadian Centre of Arts and Technology, University of Waterloo. Prior to her academic career, she worked for the Cable News Network (CNN), where she provided research for news and feature production staff at 8 domestic and 16 international bureaus. She holds a BS and MSLIS from the University of Texas, and a PhD from the Interdisciplinary Information Science Program, University of North Texas. Dr. Goodrum has authored or coauthored a book and more than 35 book chapters, journal articles, and refereed conference papers. She sits on the editorial boards of the Journal of the American Society for Information Science & Technology and the Annual Review of Information Science & Technology. Since 2000, she has acquired nearly $500,000 in research funding, and is currently the principal investigator for a $200,000 project that is examining the effect of the Patriot Act on privacy in U.S. libraries.

Harry Hammitt is editor and publisher of Access Reports, a biweekly newsletter on the Freedom of Information Act, open government laws and policies, and informational privacy issues. He has written and edited the newsletter since 1985. Hammitt has also written extensively on all aspects of the case law, legislation, and administrative practice. Besides Access Reports, he has written a monthly newsletter on access and privacy for Canada, and has served as the primary editor of Litigation Under the Federal Open Government Laws, a practice guide created for nongovernment users of FOIA and other federal access laws. In addition, Hammitt has lectured extensively on access and privacy issues in the United States and Canada. He has served as president and as a board member of the American Society of Access Professionals, a Washington-based professional organization.

Akhlaque Haque is an associate professor of government and director of graduate studies in public administration at the University of Alabama at Birmingham (UAB). He is also a senior research fellow with UAB Center for Urban Affairs. Born in Dhaka, Bangladesh, Dr. Haque received Bachelor of Social Science in Economics (Honors) from the University of Dhaka and MA (Economics) and PhD (Urban and Public Affairs) from Cleveland State University. His research interests are in the areas of administrative theory and behavior, electronic government and geographic information systems, public health, and the urban population. He is published widely in peer reviewed publications, some of which appear in the Public Administration Review, Administration and Society, Public Administration Quarterly, International Journal of Public Administration, Journal of Ethics and Technology, Journal of Rural Health, Public Health Registry, Journal of Urban Technology, Annals of Epidemiology, Journal of Management History, and Public Personnel Management. He is currently serving on the editorial board of Public Administration Review. He is serving a 3-year term in the National Council on Peer Review and Accreditation (COPRA) that reviews and determines accreditation for MPA Programs under the National School of Public Affairs and Administration (NASPAA). He is serving a 2-year elected term in the Pi Alpha Alpha National Council. Professor Haque has taught graduate courses in public administration theory and behavior, e-government, geographic information systems, public sector information technology, economic development, and policy analysis, public budgeting, research methods, and public economics. He is the recipient of several federal grants, including a grant from the U.S. Housing and Urban Development (1998-2002) and the Center for Disease Control (1998). He is currently working on an edited book on electronic government and civic engagement. Dr. Haque also holds two other appointments with School of Public Health and School of Social and Behavioral Science at UAB. He is married and has two children.

Brian S. Krueger (bkrueger@uri.edu) is an associate professor of political science at the University of Rhode Island. His research interests include conventional and unconventional political participation, political mobilization, and the impact of new technologies on politics and society.

Megan Mustafioff is the project coordinator in the Library Research Center, with expertise in data analysis and analytic methods. She holds the MS from the University of Illinois in community health. She also has survey design and implementation experience due to her consultant work for the University of Illinois.

Jeffrey Roy (jroy44@gmail.com) (PhD, Carleton; MBA, Ottawa; BA, Waterloo) is associate professor in the School of Public Administration at Dalhousie University in Halifax, Nova Scotia, Canada. He specializes in models of democratic and multistakeholder governance and electronic government reforms. Prior to joining Dalhousie, Professor Roy was associate professor at the University of Ottawa’s School of Management. In 2004-2005, Professor Roy was a visiting faculty member of the School of Public Administration at the University of Victoria. He served as managing director of the Centre on Governance at the University of Ottawa in 2001-2002. He is also a member of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development’s E-Government Network, associate editor of the International Journal of E-Government Research; a featured columnist in CIO Government Review, a Canadian publication devoted to the nexus between technology and government (www.itworldcanada.com); and author of a new 2006 book, E-government in Canada: Transformation for the Digital Age (University of Ottawa Press).

Lauren Teffeau, the Library Research Center project coordinator, has a M.A from the University of Georgia in mass communications. With experience in social scientific research methods, including surveys, focus groups, and content analysis, she has also served as a corporate communications consultant and has a background in publishing.

David C. Wyld currently serves as an associate professor of management at Southeastern Louisiana University in Hammond, Louisiana, where he teaches courses in business strategy and methods for dealing with contemporary workplace issues. He earned his doctorate in management from the University of Memphis in 1993. David has written over 60 journal articles on a wide variety of subjects dealing with contemporary management issues. These have appeared in many leading business, health care, and education journals, including: Journal of Business Research, Journal of Business Ethics, Business and Public Affairs, American Business Review, Journal of Contemporary Business Issues, Marketing Intelligence & Planning, Journal of Services Marketing, The Entrepreneurial Executive, International Journal of Management, Management Research News, Futures Research Quarterly, International Journal of Value Based Management, Managerial Law, Labor Law Journal, Public Personnel Management, Hospital & Health Services Administration, The Health Care Supervisor, and The Cornell Hotel and Restaurant Administration Quarterly. He has also presented over 80 papers at professional conferences, garnering four best paper awards for these efforts. In the area of grant writing, Dr. Wyld has served as principal investigator on two grants, securing over a quarter of a million dollars in funding to upgrade both the classroom presentation technology and computer labs of the College of Business at Southeastern Louisiana University. In recognition of these accomplishments, Dr. Wyld was awarded the campus-wide President’s Award for Excellence in Research in 1998 at Southeastern Louisiana University. In addition to his traditional teaching duties and research efforts, Dr. Wyld has served as a consultant to major corporations on a myriad of topics. He has participated extensively in delivering college classes to nontraditional students in divergent settings, teaching in Executive MBA programs, and working with emerging online universities. David, along with his wife, Karla, and two young sons, Spencer (5) and Carson (1), live in Ponchatoula, Louisiana. He also is an avid runner, and has run three marathons to date.