About the Contributors

Lloyd G. Adu Amoah is an assistant professor at Ashesi University College (Berekuso, Ghana). An alumnus of the University of Ghana, Legon, Lloyd holds a Ph.D (Public Policy Analysis) from one of China’s most prestigious universities, Wuhan University, and speaks Mandarin. He has also travelled extensively through China. Lloyd had a stint working in government at the Ghanaian Office of the President. His research interests, which are diverse and multi-disciplinary, focus on public policy formation and development in developing polities; Africa-BRICS relations; public administration and philosophy, e-governance, and ICT policy in developing countries; and the political-economy of urbanization in developing polities, among others. Lloyd’s work has appeared in Administrative Theory and Praxis Journal, Fudan Journal of the Humanities and Social Sciences, Journal of African Affairs, and the Ghana Policy Journal, among others. A freelance journalist and photographer, he has published and provided commentary on a variety of contemporary issues in the British Broadcasting Corporation’s (BBC) Focus on Africa magazine, Jeune Afrique’s The Africa Report, Third World Network’s African Agenda magazine, Business World magazine, and other local and international publications. Lloyd’s views have also been sought by the BBC World Service (World Today, Newsday, Network Africa, and Mandarin Service), Japan Broadcasting Corp., and other local and international media outlets. His recent works include “Public Policy Formation in Africa in the Wake of the Global financial Meltdown: Building Blocks for a New Mind in a Multi-Polar World,” in Dietz. T. et al. (eds.) African Engagements: Africa Engaging an Emerging Multipolar World (Brill 2011), “Constructing a New Public Administration in Africa: Reflections on Philosophical Clarity and the Process-Orientation Turn” (Administrative Theory and Praxis, 2012), and “Grey Hair, Grey Matter and ICT Policy in the Global South: The Ghana Case” in Mohammed Ehsan et al. (eds.) From Government to E-Governance: Public Administration in the Digital Age (IGI Global, 2013). Dr. Amoah is a fellow of the International Institute for Advanced Studies (IIAS), Accra, Ghana, and the African Studies Centre, Leiden, The Netherlands. He recently completed his postdoctoral at the International Institute of Asian Studies (IIAS) in Leiden.

* * *

Kajsa Hallberg Adu is a lecturer at Ashesi University College and a PhD-candidate at the University of Ghana. Since 2009, she has been teaching political science, leadership, and academic writing. Her dissertation explores student voices on the migration options and has the working title On a Course to Migrate? Migration Aspirations among University Students in Ghana. Kajsa’s research interests include higher education in Africa, migration, decolonializing theory, pedagogics, and social media. Kajsa is the founder of BloggingGhana, an organization for social media influencers in Ghana. She is herself a successful blogger on kajsaha.com. She holds a Master’s in Political Science from Uppsala University, Sweden.
About the Contributors

Nathaniel O. Agola is a professor of International Economics and Finance at Graduate School of Global Studies, Doshisha University, Kyoto, Japan. Professor Agola has authored three books, a number of book chapters, and dozens of research papers in peer reviewed journals. Professor Agola has also won international awards for his work on innovation and international economics (1998 Young Scholar Best Research Paper Award and Palgrave Macmillan 2009 Best Research Paper Award).

Paul Ankoomah is a professor in the Department of Human Performance and Leisure Studies at North Carolina A&T State University. He holds a BA degree from University of Ghana, Legon, an MA from Wilfrid Laurier University, Ontario, Canada, and a PhD from Texas A&M University, USA. His research interests include tourism marketing, consumer behavior, ecotourism, sustainable tourism development, and tourism development in Sub-Saharan Africa. Prior to life in academia, Dr. Ankoomah worked with the Ghana Tourism Board for five years as Administrative Personnel Officer, where he was responsible for administrative matters related the board’s personnel. In 1983, he proceeded to Rome, Italy, to attend a one-year training program in tourism marketing at the ScuolaInternazionale di Scienze Turistiche. He has published several tourism articles and book chapters and made numerous presentations at international conferences.

Stephen Armah is an economist specializing in econometrics, agricultural economics, industrial organization, macroeconomics, microeconomics, futures markets, and economic development. Although a young scholar, his academic career is backed by eight years of teaching experience at the college level. Stephen taught classes at Emory University and the University of Illinois before coming to Ashesi and continues to serve as an associate editor for several US-based economics journals. Stephen also worked in corporate America as a research economist in residence for Moody’s Regional Economic Consultants in West Chester, PA. Stephen Armah is currently an assistant professor of economics at Ashesi University College in Accra, Ghana. Stephen is very active in research, having won several awards in the United States for excellence in academic research. For example, he won the “best paper” awards at the South-Western Economics Conference in 2007 and at the Illinois Economics Association Conference in 2008. Furthermore, in March 2011, Stephen’s paper co-authored with Lloyd Amoah, “Media Freedom and Political Stability in SSA,” was selected as one of the very best at Oxford University’s CSAE Conference. Stephen has a reputation for being a stickler for “good research.” He focuses primarily on empirical research and has several publications to his credit. At Ashesi, Stephen is involved in the Student-Mentoring Program, serves on the Ashesi Strategic Planning Committee and Ashesi Judicial Council (AJC), and pioneered the Ashesi Economics Lecture Series, which he still directs.

Sean Clark is a Research Fellow with the Centre for Foreign Policy Studies at Dalhousie University. His research interests include the political economy of international security—particularly how it relates to the rise and fall of great powers throughout history—and political leadership, leader sclerosis, and their relationship to public policy effectiveness. He can be reached via his website, www.seanmelark.ca.
Charles Conteh is an Associate Professor in the Department of Political Science at Brock University, Ontario, Canada. He specializes in Public Policy and Management, Political Economy, and Governance. His current research focuses on governance structures and processes in complex and dynamic policy systems, particularly examining collaborative and strategic policy formulation and implementation. He has made a number of research contributions in the form of scholarly books, refereed articles, refereed conference presentations, and non-refereed publications and presentations. In particular, he has recently published a single-authored book, four co-edited books, and over twenty peer-reviewed journal articles and book chapters. Professor Conteh has also given presentations at numerous international and national academic and practitioner conferences.

Yejoo Kim is a research analyst at the Centre for Chinese Studies, Stellenbosch University in South Africa. She is a political scientist and has worked on Asian partners’ economic cooperation with Africa. The emerging economies’ role in Africa, and specifically China-Africa economic relations, Chinese-led Special Economic Zones in African countries in light of the expansion of China’s soft power, feature in her work. She is also interested in Korea’s engagement in Africa and Korea’s experience of technology and the lessons that Africa can learn from this.

Trent Larson is an associate professor in the Department of Human Performance and Leisure Studies at North Carolina A&T State University. He holds BA and MA degrees from Brigham Young University and a PhD from the University of New Mexico. His research interests focus on tourism/technology, in particular, evaluating the complexity of National Tourism Organization Websites, tourism in Africa, virtual organizations, Diaspora, comprehensive recreation planning, and environmental education. At the university, he has previously served as department chair and currently teaches an information technology course he designed. His publications include a number of tourism articles and book chapters related to international tourism development.
Lord Mawuko-Yevugah is a political and developmental economist with years of experience both as a researcher and practitioner. He started his career as a political journalist with the Business and Financial Times newspaper in Ghana and later as a Program Officer and Researcher at the Institute of Economic Affairs, Ghana. Between 2007 and 2011, he worked as a tutor in global studies and political economy at the Athabasca University in Canada. He joined the University of the Witwatersrand in Johannesburg, South Africa, in June 2011, as a Lecturer in International Relations, and has also worked as a Research Fellow at the International Institute of Social History in Amsterdam, The Netherlands. A native of Ghana, Lord Mawuko-Yevugah completed a doctorate in political science with a specialization in international political economy at the University of Alberta, Canada, and holds a master’s degree in development studies from Cambridge University, United Kingdom where he studied as a Commonwealth Scholar. He completed an undergraduate degree in political science and linguistics with First Class Honors from the University of Ghana, Legon. He is the author of Reinventing Development: Aid Reform and Technologies of Governance in Ghana (Ashgate, 2014).

John Bosco Mayiga is a PhD Candidate in Media Studies at the University of Western Ontario, Canada, where he is also a Teaching Assistant in Media, Information, and Technoculture. His research interests lie at the intersection between digital technologies and the political economy of media, information, and communications, and how this intersection impacts governance processes. Previously, he worked as the National Coordinator for Uganda Media Development Foundation (UMDF), during which time he spearheaded media development interventions, especially in the area of journalistic skills development, media policy and advocacy, and media research.

Wulystan P. Mtega holds a Master of Arts in Information Studies and is a librarian and lecturer at Sokoine University of Agriculture, Tanzania. He also holds a Bachelor of Science degree in Agricultural Economics and Agribusiness. His area of expertise in teaching includes organization of information, managing information and communication systems, information and knowledge management, and communication theory and practice. His areas of research interest are marketing information systems, geographical information systems, communication systems, socio informatics, information marketing, information economics, and network economics.

Yifat Nahmias is an attorney and a legal scholar specializing in the field of international and domestic Intellectual Property law. Yifat practices Intellectual Property litigation and Intellectual Property transactional work in Israel. She is a member of the Israeli Bar Association and has also been admitted to the New York Bar. Her expertise in Intellectual Property is also founded on her exceptional academic background. She has been involved in several research projects focusing on international Intellectual Property law, access to information, global governance of Intellectual Property, and Innovation Policy. Yifat obtained a master’s degree (Intellectual Property) from George Washington University Law School, Washington D.C. She also holds a LL.B. degree (Law and Technology) from Haifa University, Israel.
Chantal Phillips holds a Master’s Degree in Library and Information Science. She currently works as an Associate Librarian at the University of Guelph, Canada. Her research interests include access to information for marginalized rural and remote communities. She recently completed more than 10 years on a bi-national research project with the University of Dar Es Salaam, Tanzania, which successfully developed new master’s and PhD programs in Civil Society for the Institute of Development Studies. Her current research includes digitization of agricultural reports within an open access licensing framework to identify policies and practices that encourage free access to publications for all.

Cedric Pierre-Louis is a media practitioner from Martinique, who currently leads one of the largest media houses in Rwanda. After studying political science for more than three years, he finally got his Bachelor’s Degree in Management at the Catholic University of Lille (UCL). Then, he started a Master’s in International Management and spent one year in Valencia (Spain) and another year in Brussels (Belgium), where he worked as an intern in a lobbying organization. After these fruitful experiences, he graduated with a second Master’s Degree in International Corporate Management. Following several opportunities in many different fields and countries, he ended up in Rwanda, as Innovation and Business Development Manager of Tele10 group, whose core business has been pay-tv for more than 20 years. He was appointed Managing Director of Radio10, the first private radio station of the country. After revamping Radio10, he became project leader for the launch of TV10, the first private TV channel of Rwanda. He is also in charge of the digital migration strategy of Tele10 group. Media, ICT, and Innovation are part of his intellectual interests, which encompass political science and geopolitics. He recently presented a paper in 2013 on the digital migration process in Rwanda at a conference hosted by Carleton University’s Institute of African Studies in Ottawa (Canada, May 2013). Creative, afroptimist, and a capacity builder, Cedric defines himself as a world citizen who feels at home everywhere he goes.

Olga Rataj is an economist from Poland. After graduation from the Vienna University of Economics, she has been active in the international development community. The related professional assignments included support for the Polish Presidency of the Council of the European Union, work on the thematic areas of UNIDO (United Nations Industrial Development Organization), UNCITRAL (United Nations Commission on International Trade Law), and UNODC (United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime), as well as WHO Office for Investment for Health and Development. She has also been working in the private sector. Her areas of interest include sustainable development, energy/climate/environment, CSR, and corporate governance.

Owais Hassan Shaikh is a Doctoral Scholar at the Law Faculty of the Ludwig Maximilians Universität (LMU), Munich, Germany, on a research scholarship from the Max Planck Institute for Intellectual Property and Competition Law, Munich. His research focuses on the provisions on test data exclusivity protection for pharmaceuticals in Free Trade Agreements and implementation options for developing countries. He obtained a Master’s of Law from Munich Intellectual Property Law Center (University of Augsburg), Munich, in 2010, and a Master’s in Business Administration from the Institute of Business Administration, Karachi, Pakistan, in 2004. He served as Assistant Director—Trade Mark Registry at the Intellectual Property Organization of Pakistan from June 2006 to September 2009. He is especially interested in Intellectual Property’s interface with innovation and trade law, as well as competition law and policy.
About the Contributors

Greg Smith earned an honors BA in Political Science from Brock University in 1988, followed by a Master’s in Library and Information Science in 1990 from the University of Toronto, followed by a post-graduate certificate in Information Management in 2010 from the University of Toronto’s iSchool Institute Information Management Certificate program. In addition to his education, Greg has worked in the public library, municipal government, and education sectors, managing integrated information systems, Website development, and digital marketing solutions. The combination of education and experience has provided Greg with knowledge, understanding, and appreciation for Information Management processes and practices. Ultimately, he strives to facilitate information discovery and delivery for organizations to run more efficiently and effectively, and to add value to their business operations. Greg’s interest in Information/Knowledge management of corporate and government organizations has merged with his interest in the economic and political development of developing countries, specifically in Africa, which is a region of personal interest. Currently, Greg is the Library Systems Administrator for the Dufferin/Peel Catholic District School Board and resides in the city of St. Catharines, located in Canada’s Niagara region.

Marwa Soudi is currently the Technical Manager of Al-Searag in charge of innovation and content. She also manages Ideas Gym Center, which is a branch of Al-Searag. Under Ideas Gym, Marwa is the national organizer of “World Robotics Olympiad” in Egypt, co-organizer of Egyptian Math Olympiad, and co-organizer of International Olympiad of Astronomy and Astro-physics. Marwa is also the women and junior activities chair in IEEE Robotics and Automation society. Marwa graduated from Alexandria University in Electronics and Communication with a grade of very good in 2006. Her M.sc. was on LASER propagation in the atmosphere and meta-material devices, which she finalized in May 2011. Marwa published five papers between 2006 and 2011. Since her graduation, she has worked as a research specialist in the Center of Special Studies and Projects (CSSP) at Bibliotheca Alexandrina, a research Engineer at Ainshams optics and lasers laboratory, technical translator at Entrepreneur magazine (MENA), a freelance translator and pre-university curriculum creator (she created and translated many curricula related to education with companies such as INTEL through the Arab Science and Technology Foundation), and runs her own company Al-Searag. Marwa has received global recognition for her work from the World Bank, Stanford University, the Saint Louis Museum and the Ministry of Education of Malaysia among others.

Arja Vainio-Mattila was recently appointed Dean of the School of Arts and Social Sciences at the University of Cape Breton, Canada. Prior to her appointment, Dr. Vainio-Mattila was at Huron University College in London, Ontario, where she has been a faculty in global development studies since 1998, Director of the Centre for Global Studies (2000-2007), and Associate Dean (2009-2012). Dr. Vainio-Mattila continues her appointment as Docent at the Helsinki University in the Faculty of Social Science.
Li Wengang is senior research fellow at the Institute of West-Asian and African Studies, Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, and deputy director of Division of Social and Cultural Studies of the Institute. His research interests include African ethnic and religious issues in general, and Nigeria in particular, China-Africa relations, and China’s soft power expressions in Africa.

Chen Yulai is senior research fellow at the Institute of West-Asian and African Studies, Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, the deputy director of Center of Southern African Studies, IWAAS, CASS. His research mainly focuses on the development of SADC, Zimbabwe, and big powers’ aid to Africa. Recently, he has paid more attention to China-Africa economic cooperation as well.