With the writing of this page, the editors finally pause for breath.

Producing a second edition of the Encyclopedia of Distance and Online Learning was a major team effort that required large amounts of time and energy. Often, our emails crossed the globe in near real time as we corresponded on articles, direction, and deadlines. And through all of our efforts, we once again had the support and over-all vision from Dr. Mehdi Khosrow-Pour and his great team at IGI Global. Their help and guidance over the last few months before the manuscript went into production are a testament to the caliber of wonderful people working at this prolific publishing house!

Thanks to the many authors whose new and updated articles provide an important body of knowledge in distance and online learning. We want to thank Kristen Roth for her insights, high energy, and hard work early in the project. We particularly want to thank our development editor, Julia Mosemann, for her Herculean effort to keep us on deadline and moving forward. We are a very busy group of editors, and with Julia's patience, positive support, and good humor this Second Edition of the Encyclopedia of Distance and Online Learning was made possible.
