

Acknowledgment

We firstly thank the many scholars and practitioners throughout the world who freely contributed their creative ideas to make this book one of a kind. They not only wrote the chapters but also did the reviews, helped with indexing, provided key words and copyedited their chapters. Thanks for help in reviewing also go to Marcus Foth, Victor M. Gonzalez, Nicholas J. Kings, Jim Nyce, and Colstan Sanger. We thank IGI for this opportunity to get these ideas out in an efficient, effective and timely manner. We thank our publisher's representative, Julia Mosemann, who patiently listened and responded to our publishing needs, complaints, suggestions and entreaties. Especial thanks go to the Editorial Board members and to the section prologue writers: Tom Stewart, Ronald Stamper Mark Aakhus, Tom Erickson, Anton Nijholt, Starr Roxanne Hiltz and Charles Steinfield, who drew upon their considerable knowledge and experience to provide advice and raise issues before each section. Last (but not least!) we thank Siew Whitworth for administrative support, particularly early on in the project. Brian also thanks his wife for her moral support, and tolerating his many hours spent on the details of this book. Indeed we both thank family, colleagues and friends who saw much less of us than usual due to this project (and may have had more to do as a result). Yet we alone are responsible for this work. As editors, we selected the contributions (with advice), advised changes, made editorial amendments and checked the details at each stage, so any errors, omissions or weaknesses in this work are ours alone. Finally, let us not forget those people known and unknown without whom this book would not have been possible—the designers, builders, managers and users of socio-technical systems!

We are, sincerely,

Brian Whitworth and Aldo de Moor, editors
