

Acknowledgments

As editor of this encyclopedia, I would like to acknowledge the help of those individuals involved in the various phases of this project, without whose support this encyclopedia could not have been satisfactorily completed. I would like to begin by thanking Dr. Mehdi Khosrow-Pour of Idea Group Inc. for inviting me to undertake a project that I had wanted to do for several years. I would also like to thank the staff members Renée Davies and Michelle Potter at Idea Group Inc. who worked closely with me on the production of this encyclopedia.

I would like to thank the members of the Advisory Board—Alison Adam, Jane Margolis, Helen Richardson, and Liisa von Hellens—for their help in recruiting contributions to this encyclopedia and for writing the introductory articles for it. I would also like to thank the authors and the reviewers for their contributions to this two-volume encyclopedia. Without the interest and commitment of individuals around the world who are engaged in gender and IT research, this encyclopedia would not have been possible.

I would like to extend my deepest gratitude to my colleagues in the College of Information Sciences and Technology at The Pennsylvania State University who made this encyclopedia a reality. They helped me shepherd each article through the process from solicitation and proposal, to submission, review, and revision, to the final product. This encyclopedia could not have been accomplished without their diligence and dedication. Three research assistants—Haiyan Huang and Allison Morgan, working under the direction of Jeria Quesenberry—learned, firsthand, about the trials and tribulations of academic publishing as they developed the encyclopedia Web site, managed the article submission system, tracked down reviews, reminded authors, followed-up on revisions, and collated the finished product. David Hall, Associate Dean for Research, provided resources when necessary to complete this project, our Information Technology Office, and in particular, Steve Murgas and Ed Putt, who helped us with the project Web site and submission system, and Tracy Ray from our Research Office saw the final manuscript to completion.

Finally, I would like to thank Kathy Drieaus for her understanding and support, and for patiently listening to me talk about this project.

*Eileen M. Trauth, PhD
State College, Pennsylvania, USA
November 2005*