

Acknowledgment

This book is not only the product of my research for 10 years in the library and information science area, but it also reflects contributions from many of the researchers in the field. Of course, I could not have written the book without the help of my family members, friends, and colleagues. Although I am not able to name everyone who deserves to be thanked because of space limitations, I would like to say thank you here to those who have been most supportive of my work.

First, I would like to thank every researcher's work that inspired my book. Among them, Marcia Bates, Nick Belkin, Raya Fidel, Carol Hert, Peter Ingwersen, Carol C. Kuhlthau, Nils Pharo, Amanda Spink, Tefko Saracevic, Pertti Vakkari, and Peiling Wang, who either sent me their original models or suggested how to obtain them. I would like to specifically thank Nick Belkin for offering his constructive suggestions for the structure of the book, Peter Ingwersen and Pertti Vakkari for their valuable comments on the early version of the planned-situational interactive IR model, and Marcia Bates and Andrew Dillon for their stimulating discussion of the model and its implications for IR system design at the CoLIS6 Conference.

I am indebted to the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee for granting me the sabbatical leave that made it possible for me to write this book. I also received much support from my colleagues and students, in particular Dean Johannes J. Britz and Dietmar Wolfram at the School of Information Studies. In addition, I would like to thank Marilyn Antkowiak, Yang Zhuo, and Abby A. Von Arx for their assistance in finding relevant literature and checking references.

I would like to express my appreciation to Kristin Roth and Deborah Yahnke from IGI Global for answering my questions and supporting me at every stage of the book writing process, as well as the three anonymous reviewers for their insightful comments and suggestions. As a nonnative speaker of English, I have learned that writing a book takes extra effort. I owe my gratitude to Carolyn Kott Washburne for her editing of the book, and in particular for offering timely service.

Finally, I would like to dedicate this book to my husband, Charlie, and my daughter, Vivian, for their support, encouragement, and patience along the journey. Hopefully, by finishing this book, I can play a better role as a wife and mother. My daughter won't imitate my working on computer in her daycare, saying "Give mommy 5 more minutes" anymore. I'm also indebted to my parents for their unconditional love and support.

Iris Xie

University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee, USA