

Acknowledgments

The writing of a book such as this is never a solo, or in this case a duo effort, it requires the assistance, skill, patience, and good will of many people.

We would firstly like to thank Professor Sten Carlsson and Monika Magnusson from Karlstad University in Sweden for their diligence in developing the Swedish questionnaire used in this study. We would also like to thank Sten's students for the distribution, gathering, and coding of the data from SMEs in and around Karlstad.

For the U.S. section of this study, we are indebted to Dr. Jean Pratt and Mark Harris from Utah State University who oversaw the distribution of questionnaires and the gathering of data from U.S. regional SMEs.

The Australian "leg" of the study required many hours of sweet-talking and cajoling SME owner/managers over the phone. This, sometimes difficult task was handled professionally and patiently by Sheila Matete, Connie Nielsen, and Tarcita Heaven.

The authors would like to give a special thanks to Danielle Stern for her knowledge and insights into the world of statistics. While we knew of many of the techniques available to us, Danielle opened our eyes to many other exciting possibilities that have given these studies a far greater depth than we might have first imagined possible.

Our gratitude also goes out to Dr. Deborah Bunker at the University of New South Wales for her support and involvement in certain aspects of this research study.

The production of a book such as this not only requires the skills of data gathering and analysis, it requires a knowledgeable publishing team to guide, referee, and produce a final product that is useful to the reader. The authors have nothing but praise for the team at IGI Global, and particularly Kristin Roth, who have advised us on every step of the journey from having some interesting insights into SMEs and e-commerce to producing a manuscript that is useful to both researchers and practitioners in the field.

Particular thanks goes to Professor Harry Matlay for his ongoing support of our work and for writing the foreword to this book. Harry has always been a leading light in the study of SMEs and his endorsement means a lot to us.

A book such as this cannot be written without data. The authors would like to thank all of the owner/managers who took time away from their busy schedules to answer questions concerning their experiences and views of e-commerce. There is no substitute for practical experience.

Finally, we would like to thank our respective partners, Connie and Diniz, who have listened, smiled, nodded, and kept us going throughout this project.
