

Acknowledgments

When I first accepted the invitation to complete this project, I really did not know where the journey of editing a book would take me. However, from the first moment on, I received continuous support and guidance from Dr. Mehdi Knosrowpour and his staff at Idea Group Publishing. I would like to thank Dr. Knosrowpour for his belief that my prospectus was worthy for publication. His enthusiasm for the project motivated me throughout the process. I would also like to thank Michele Rossi, my Development Editor who tolerated my incessant e-mails of queries and comments regarding the status of the project. She kept the project on schedule and I appreciate her patient reminders of all our deadlines. She was also very supportive and helpful throughout the process.

A very special thanks goes to all of the authors for their excellent contributions to this book. I have learned so much from their insights and research and appreciate their commitment to participate in this project. It has been a privilege for me to work with each of them. I value our collaboration and hope that we all can continue to work together to promote further research and understanding of Web-accessibility issues.

I would also like to thank the reviewers of the chapters, specifically, my dear friend and colleague Dr. Renate Prescott who assisted me with the final review of the entire manuscript. Dr. Prescott proved to be a constructive editor and ally throughout the process. I value her perspective and appreciate her willingness to help me whenever I ask. She is a good colleague, a great friend, and the sister I wish I had.

Special thanks goes to my friends and colleagues at Kent State University Geauga for their support and encouragement throughout the project, specifically, Louise Senra and Shelley Marshall. Louise Senra, the Coordinator of Disability Services at our campus, offered me many suggestions regarding the resources I should include for the appendices. Her dedication and commitment to students with disabilities will always be an inspiration to me. Shelley Marshall, our Network Systems Administrator, provided a great deal of insight to understanding the types of technologies used by students with disabilities. Shelley's understanding of special needs students and willingness to find innovative ways to help them is amazing. I have learned so much from her and I appreciate her willingness to share her knowledge.

To the Geauga Campus Library staff: Kim Cook, Laurel Purdum, Carrie Butcher, and Jessie Butcher, I appreciate their support and assistance. My staff members not only helped me in checking and typing resources, citations, and hyperlinks, but they also searched for additional resources and information needed in the appendices. Most importantly, they went out of their way to make my life easier during the course of this project, and I thank them for that.

A special thanks also goes to Tom McNulty of New York University. As the Editor-in-Chief of the Information Technology and Disabilities Journal, Tom was the very first person to post a “Call for Papers” for the project. His action brought me into contact with several people eager to support this project, including two of the authors. I appreciate his thoughtfulness and thank him for his encouragement and advice. I value Tom’s research on making libraries more accessible and also, his indefinite extension of the paper I have promised to write him for his journal.

Special thanks goes also to all the staff and publishing team at Idea Group Publishing, whose contributions throughout the process of this project made me understand the value of collaboration and teamwork. The ongoing professional support from the editorial staff at Idea Group Publishing made this project feasible. I appreciate the work that everyone did to make this publication possible.

To my parents, I thank them for showing me the importance of being considerate to others. Through their actions, they made me understand why we should always find ways to help people. The seeds of this project grew out of the values they taught me. To my four older brothers, Dan, John, Tom, and Rick, I cherish each of them for their support and the sense of strength they give me. Maybe now, they won’t tease me anymore.

Last, but not least, I must express my love and deepest regard for my husband, Tom. For almost a year, Tom had to live with mountains of papers, books, and notebooks for this project all over our house. He has now become a new expert on Web accessibility. I am very grateful for his patient understanding and sense of humor. I love him dearly. I also love our two little boys, Andrew and Thomas.
