

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The authors wish to acknowledge Indiana University-Purdue University at Indianapolis and Montana State University for their support of the authors' work on this book. The authors thank their families for their patience and support during the project and thank the many colleagues and friends who have contributed to the development of their thinking about Internet portals. In particular, Mark Sheehan wishes to thank Keiko Pitter of Whitman College for the many discussions in which she helped frame his perspective.

In addition, the authors wish to thank the following individuals who participated in their Summer 2001 survey (in alphabetical order by institution).
