

Acknowledgments

So many people have played a role in the development of the ideas presented here that it is difficult to know where to begin in acknowledging them. The first draft of this manuscript was written while I was a PhD student at the Centre of Strategic Information Systems in the Department of Information Systems and Computing at Brunel University. All the staff at DISC, initially, established a wonderfully hospitable environment for this enterprise.

I owe an inestimable debt of gratitude to Michael Livesey with whom I have discussed many of the ideas developed herein and who read and made numerous helpful comments and suggestions on several drafts that have been incorporated in the final version of this book.

While I was writing this manuscript, I was reading Wendy Currie's excellent book Value Creation from e-Business Models (Elsevier Butterworth-Heinemann, 2004). Her study clarified my thinking on many issues and contributed to shaping the direction of my own work. I humbly appreciate her continuous support and encouragement as I seek my way through the 'trap-doors' of academic life.

This book would not have been possible without the cooperation and assistance of the authors, reviewers, my colleagues and the staff at Idea Group Publishing. The editors would like to thank people at Idea Group, namely: Mehdi Khosrow-Pour for inviting us to produce this book, Jan Travers and Amanda Appicello for their contributions, Diane Huskinson and Michele Rossi for managing this project, especially for answering our questions and keeping us on schedule. A special word of thanks goes to Ms. Kristin Roth, for her diligence and determined stewardship during this laborious project.

Last but certainly not least my family (including Evelyn Christine, Michael Appopo, Matthew Gbeyadeu and David Gbemie) who have all patiently borne with me through dejection and inspiration as this book has evolved. Evelyn has also provided a steady supply of patience, sound judgement and an indefatigable supply of good nature for which I will continue to owe her considerably.