INTRODUCTION

In the last decade, the programs covered in engaged scholarship has been widely viewed as academic service-learning and community service, which aims to link the classroom and community through courses with a transformative experiential education (Jacoby, 2009). By promoting the interrelationship of teaching, research, and service, this initiative is significant to reach beyond interactions and contributions to the environment with more open and inclusive area. In addition to feeling comfortable to have access to space, starting point into existing in the community should maintain a reciprocal relationship with the community. To brainstorm about the challenges of what to contribute to others is necessary to create more open on opportunity in putting awareness and goodwill from the community towards the group or organization. The need to work in empowering both academic service learning and community-based service to engage with the critical thinking is significant to expand social, cultural, and human capital in both local communities and universities (Kirshner, Strobel, & Fernández, 2003). While higher education (HE) should have an initiative to inculcate civic responsibility among students with the goal to produce responsible citizens and active participants in the community, service learning would contribute to the transformative experiential education. This attempt would take beneficial outcomes in connecting theory into practice in creating experiential learning opportunities to lead
